Hope for women after long dry spell

Thursday, October 07, 2010

Women moaning about men getting all the fun following the success of Viagra may be pleased to know help will soon be at hand.

A treatment for post-menopausal women who suffer from vaginal atrophy - when tissues become drier, leading to uncomfortable or painful sex - is being developed. The product, dubbed Vaginorm, could be welcome relief for an estimated 360 million women worldwide aged 50 or older.

German pharmaceutical giant Bayer and Quebec's EndoCeutics have teamed up for the phase III trials and will bring Vaginorm to market.
